

Daily Dose Announces Plans for a Spanish Program

Ever since Daily Dose established business in 2001 with the Daily Dose English Program, the most often asked question has been “Is there a Daily Dose for Spanish?” The time is now right for the development of Daily Dose for people who want to learn Spanish. The program will be available to consumers in the Spring of 2010.

The Daily Dose 360 Spanish Program encompasses the original Daily Dose methodology and has additional components, making the complete system more robust and enhances the learning process in a social environment. The topics included in Daily Dose 360 Spanish Program helps consumers learn Spanish that they can apply immediately during everyday life. As always, Daily Dose focuses on improving conversational language and does not include grammar. Learners may have taken Spanish in high school and are not yet fluent: This is the right program to help them gain confidence and become proficient at everyday conversation.

The company will be taking pre-orders as early as December 2009 on the website: www.dailydoselearning.com.
